Description
This is a very minor issue, but when adding an issue relation, the log shows something like:  Related to Bug #689: blah blah blah blah  Removing this relation gives something like:  Related to deleted (Bug #689: blah blah blah blah)  I think it would be better to change this to:  Related to Bug #689: blah blah blah blah  It would indicate clearly that the issue was related to #xyz but it's no longer the case anymore.  Seen with: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Redmine 3.0.1</li><li>• Linux 3.17 x86_64</li><li>• Ruby 1.9.3-p551</li></ul>

I think it is confusing whether issue is closed or not.
(Though closed issue color is gray in default style sheet.)

You're right. But I just find this:

- Related to deleted (Feature #1005: Add the addition/removal/change of related issues to the history)

to be confusing about what was done

I have 3 ideas that would improve it IMHO:

1. Could be only the Related to being striped out, like:
  - ~~Related to~~ Feature #1005 (Add the addition/removal/change of related issues to the history)
2. Or move the deleted word after the issue description, such as:
  - Related to Feature #1005 (Add the addition/removal/change of related issues to the history) deleted
3. Or just rephrase the Related to part:
  - No longer related to Feature #1005 (Add the addition/removal/change of related issues to the history)

What do you think?

As for me the 3rd is the best
