Description

Currently, members are added to the a project by going to Settings > Members > and you click on New Member. What i'd like to see is if the this feature can account for all projects related to the parent and propagate the access across all.

For example:
Parent Project A, add member to a speficic role. All child projects under this Parent Project A would have the same member and role added.
Child Project of A
Child Project of A

What different with "Inherit members"?

The issue isn't the ability or inability to Inherit Members to new projects. It's the ability to add one person to multiple projects at one time. If I have ten projects that a person needs to be a part of, I would need to add the user to each project one by one by going into the settings options for each project.

My request is to have the ability in the settings menu to show the projects available to be added to. So it would be very similar to having the multiple choices of roles to choose from, but to now expand it to multiple projects to add a user to.

This functionality is already available to Redmine administrators via /users/<numerical_uid>/edit?tab=memberships (Administration -> Users -> Projects -> Add projects).
