Description
Patch is attached. Would be great for global plugin features/views which are not important enough to be added to top_menu, yet need a place somewhere that is not project-specific.

Patch looks ok but I'm been thinking about how some of Redmine's contextual menus are done. Because once this hook is in there, someone else will want to add to the start of the list and someone else will want to add in the middle of the list, etc...

We'd better have a non-hook based API for adding items to contextual menus, much like the main menu.

An other option is to use deface to hook into views rendering, I do it in most of my plugins and it works well as long as css selectors are stable, which is the case in general.

Shouldn't "target version" of this issue be removed?
