Description
Right now, once you are in a forum, or an individual post, there is no easy way to get back to the forum, or the "root" of the forums. A simple breadcrumb style nav element at the top of the forum page would solve this problem. It would also help if sub-forums are implemented.

Add breadcrumb nav for the forums (#892).

History

Actually, there's a breadcrumb when you're on a message, so that you can go back to the message list of the current forum. And the 'Forums' link is always available in the main menu.

But I can improve it by adding 'Forums >>' at the beginning on the h2 title, so we would have:

On the forum list: Forums
On a forum: Forums >> <forum name>
On a message: Forums >> <forum name> >> <topic>

What do you think ?

That is exactly what i was thinking of too.

I think that the breadcrumb shouldn't be included in the h2 title.

Here is what it would look like:

Any comments ?
