What would be the expected behaviour?

To show the original file names, with some indication that the files are no longer there.

An example of reasonable behavior can be seen here: in this commit, the files Events.cs and Utilities.cs no longer exist. When one clicks in Show Diff Stats, there is an icon showing that those files were removed.

P.S. Optionally, I wouldn't even show their contents too (my diff got truncated here, since some of the removed files were quite long...), but that's an extra :)

#4 - 2012-09-18 21:35 - Jean-Philippe Lang

- Subject changed from /dev/null in commit-diff-views to Git diff displays deleted files as /dev/null
- Status changed from New to Closed
- Assignee set to Jean-Philippe Lang
- Target version set to 2.2.0
- Resolution set to Fixed

Fixed in r10424. The indication that the file was deleted is displayed on the revision view.

Not sure that this behaviour is desirable to everyone, maybe a separate feature request.

Oh, and don't forget to clear your cache if you upgrade (diff rendering is cached).
