Description What about to add "search scope" to search fields? My idea is to add two checkboxes under under/next to search field: [x] search also in subprojects [x] search in all projects  I hope the functionality is evident. If you select "[x] search in all projects", the field "[x] search also in subprojects" will be automatically marked as checked and the field will be unaccessible. Also radio buttons can be used, but in will be a lot of text IMHO: Search: (o) this project only, ( ) also in subprojects, ( ) all projects  What others think?

As of r1435, you can search in all projects. I added a drop down list to choose the scope. Currently, you can choose:

- All projects
- My projects (if you belong to some projects)
- Current project (if you are inside a project)

It shouldn't be hard to add 'current project and subprojects' if the current has some subprojects :-)
Btw, I think a drop down list is more appropriate, isn't it ?

I just checked implementation.

On dedicated search page it's just OK.

But I think that same scope should be on the search box at main blue header - now users are not sure where they are currently searching...

I prefer to keep the header light.

Users can simply click the search link to see the full search form.
