Description

Environment:
    Redmine version 2.3.0.stable
    Ruby version 1.9.3 (i386-mingw32)
    Rails version 3.2.13
    Environment production
    Database adapter Mysql2

I'm having trouble with users other than the administrator, because I created custom fields, the choice of tasks, this field is a list for inserting new task he pulls some information, but if the users are different administrator change the ticket out, he ignores the information initially released the first information and pulls the list of the custom field.
I tried to delete the custom field and make the inclusion again, but not solved.
I was using an old version of redmine, was after I upgrade that gave isso.Obrigado and await response.

I don't understand your description and your problem.

I create a new task including a custom field, which is a list of clients, but to make a change in the task by a Normal User, always pulls the first name on the list, and not what was initially placed, already checked the permissions and are allowed to do with changing the field, started happening after I updated to 2.3.0 version of redmine.

Try this: Create a new custom field list for issues. The new created list should be simple: only a few values and latin letters. Then create a new issue to verify if your described defect appears again.
