Description
The priority of a parent task is automatically set to the maximum priority of all its subtasks. I think it should be set to the maximum priority of all its open subtasks. Does that make sense?

History

I think it depends on the individual workflow and how priority is used.

For example, priority of sub-task might imply priority of the that task among all the tasks under that parent issue, but the overall parent task may still be 'normal'

It's a problem that cannot be solved with workflow management.

The Parent issue's priority should (must) set to the highest priority of the sub-tasks.

Definitely an issue there.

Please raise the priority and include it into next release.

Thanks
