Description

The email footer points people to their email notification preferences, but people are notified of watched issues too. This is hard to explain in a footer.

If "Watched issues" was on "My page" by default, it would be easier. Maybe below "Reported issues".

A link in the "Email notifications" section of "My account" would be helpful too.

The profile page already shows "Assigned issues" and "Reported issues", so a new row "Watched issues" can be added there.

For privacy reasons, I think the new "Watched issue" row should be visible only to the user (invisible to other users).

There's already a filter for that on the issues list view. We could add a link to the filtered issues in the notification mail.
I think that's more discoverable than a link in the user profile.

The 'watched issues on my-page' feature can be achieved by adding a custom query list, too.

I made a patch to add the "Watched issues" on profile page.

I think there is a possibility that users may be able to get new insights by looking at "Watched Issues" with "Assigned Issues" and "Reported Issues".
