Description

Currently, you can see total spent hours on the project overview page.

I think it is useful for project managers if total estimated hours are shown as well.

The screenshot shows the Redmine interface for a project named 'eCookbook'. The navigation bar includes 'Home', 'My page', 'Projects', 'Administration', and 'Help'. The project overview page displays the following information:

- Overview: Recipes management application. Homepage: <http://ecookbook.somenet.foo/>. Development status: Stable.
- Issue tracking: A table showing the status of issues.
- Time tracking: A section showing 'Spent time: 189.90 hours' and 'Estimated time: 252.00 hours', which are highlighted with a pink box in the original image.
- Latest news: A list of recent news items, including '100,000 downloads for eCookbook 1.0' and 'eCookbook first release!'. Each item is attributed to 'John Smith'.
- Members: Manager: John Smith, Developer: Dave Lopper.
- Subprojects: Private child of eCookbook.

+1 Yes, could be useful.
I would also be great to have this information in a nice bar chart. But this is a future topic. ;-)

I think we should show first estimated hours and spent time after (it is more natural).

Thanks, probably you are right.

Although I prefer to show spent time first, I found that VersionsController#show shows estimated time first. I think I have to update my patch for consistency.
