Indeed, but I don't think it is a defect. Time entry visibility is (and has always been) independent of issue visibility. Time entries and issues aren't coupled in any way regarding object visibility. Instead, time entry visibility depends entirely on the :view_time_entries permission together with the "time logs visibility" role setting that determines if the role can view all or own time entries only.

I can see it but cannot understand the logic behind it (I thought there is no other option because it is evident that the time entries of a non-accessable issue cannot be accessed; why would someone need to see the entries of an issue he cannot see?).
