Description

Often happens that user creates new issue and knows that this issue is somehow related to another issue.
Currently one has to create issue and then add related issues.
This should be possible during creation of the issue.

Kind regards

Added issue-relation to issue #1881. Shouldn't it be marked as a duplicate? Hmm... Maybe...

Nope, they have 2 distinct scopes: #1881 is "i am viewing an issue and would like to create a related issue with a single click" and this here is "i am creating a new issue and would like to add a relation to an existing issue on the creation form". I agree that if this feature request is implemented, #1881 would be quite trivial as you would only have to make the Create a related issue link autofill the "related issue" field on the creation view, but they don't have the same scope.

Would improve the workflow.

+1 This could not only improve the workflow, but also minimize the amount of sent notification emails (one mail for creation, not one for creation + one for every relation you make afterwards)

+1 Pretty please. Issues don't get marked as related because nobody wants to spam the entire team with emails.

The way issue relations currently need to be added, a lot of emails get sent out. It would significantly reduce spam if issues could get linked upon creation with a single action.
