Description

I use this approach often but unfortunately outside redmine.
Maybe adding this feature to redmine will be useful not only for me.

When project manager reviews tasks, he often think of to create some simple todo list for himself for managing & creating further tasks, for example:

- add report to bug X
- think about feature ... and add it for next version
- change the screenshot in issue #xxx, looks very uninformative

As you can see, there is no sense to create tasks for each thing like this, neither to track time and resolve/close all these small things.

But it will be very useful to have simple TODO list individual to each project administrator - so we can plan our management and make small notes.

As for me, I'm usign this almost everyday - I build small TODO list of things to be done - like creating new issues, doing some small tests and sending some emails with requests about small things - I do not need all this to be tracked, and I would like to quickly add / check / remove items from such individual todo list.

Maybe short version of this list can be added somewhere on the right panel so it will be always viewable:

So what I'm proposing:

1. Small & very simple individual list - viewable only for logged in user.
2. Not sure if this must be available only for admin or for any users (or even configurable?)
3. Even more simplified version on the right hand panel, with ability to "Add" new tasks, "Remove" from list, and "Check" todo items to make them as resolved.
4. No time tracking, no tasks statuses (only checked/unchecked), no assignement, no categories etc - just simple simple for user's own planning & organizing.

Maybe the Todo Lists plugin can help you with this?

I have never seen it, and I'll try it.

But actually I believe that feature like this must be in core - so we never bother checking plugin compatibility before to update redmine to the next version.

In my redmine installation I use zero plugins to avoid compatibility problems with update of core redmine engine - because small issues like this stops all the business: when it works before and then stops with update - then problem begins.
