Description
I don't know about anyone else, but the selector that used to appear on the welcome page and the issues index page that let you add a new issue, no longer shows up, so I can't add any more issues. This is while using the admin user who is set as the manager on all projects, and the issue is visible on all projects. I'm running the latest SVN code, btw. Any idea what might have happened?

The selector was removed. You can now add issues from anywhere inside the project. You should see a "New issue" item in the project drop down menu. See attached screenshot.

Please, let me know if it's ok.

I'd still prefer it in the context of the issue list? Also since the menu is a little bit "jumpy".
- big problem to restore?

Sorry for reviving what seems to be a feature request, and not a bug...

I don't where the selector was before(new user), but I vote for having it in the issue list (it can stay in the menu, as well). Also, maybe a separate entry in the menu, as well? Or in the project overview page...

The drop-down project menu was removed in rev 674. 'New issue' selector is back on the issue list and the project overview.
